VOLUME 53, NO. 11

SPARKS' PERSPECTIVE

Ron Sparks Commissioner

Avian influenza has been getting more and more attention in the news lately and with good reason. Reports that avian influenza, or AI, has caused illness and death in Asian countries are frightening to us here in the United States. I want to tell you more about AI and what we at the Alabama Department of Agriculture and Industries are doing to help protect you from the spread of this disease.

First, it is important to understand that AI is an animal health issue with potential human concerns. The current spread of the viral disease in Asia in poultry and to humans has predominantly been through their local poultry houses. Based on the current information we have, there have not been any recent con-countries, it is common for workers to live in or near their poultry houses.

I believe that there is no comparison between poultry house practices in Alabama and those in the Asian countries that have been affected by this disease. Bio-security has been an important issue to the agricultural industry for a long time. In the U.S., the poultry industry takes strict measures to protect their workers, the public, and the food supply. Not only do they do the simple things that make a big difference such as entry site foot baths, farmers and producers in Alabama are now using GPS systems and premises ID registration to track and protect their flocks.

The overall health of birds in the U.S. is better than in

Auburn's Agriculture

With agriculture being the number one industry in Alabama, Dr. Ed Richardson is looking to position Auburn University for the future through an innovative new initiative for the agricultural college. Dr. Richardson took a few minutes to give the Farmers and Consumers Bulletin an overview.

Dr. Ed Richardson

What inspired the new agricultural initiative at Auburn?

There were several reasons. I think what we have seen is that many industries within this country, whether it be textile or manufacturing, steel and so forth, have suffered greatly unless something is done reposition agriculture for the future that it would be heading just like textiles and other this country and that is a reduction in jobs, major setbacks and things like that. We have to decide for Auburn now is what direction will take? I then pulled together a commission of about 25 representatives of the commodity groups ranging from poultry, cattle, and timber and pulled all of those together. We went through a process with a consultant as to what these people see, what we need to do, what are the problems. They all saw very quickly that agriculture some very serious problems and they were looking Auburn University to position for the future. We had to decide which direction to go. We had now had a study group I within the university that made a concerted effort to and identify the future. I think what we can say safely is there are some commodity

Hurricane Katrina and Rita Relief

Hurricane Katrina left parts of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama in rubble; and, as the world watched this tragedy unfold; another hurricane, Rita plowed through East Texas and western Louisiana adding to the toil and despair that Katrina had dealt to the citizens of the Gulf Coast. Reports of damages are still incoming as power and communication lines are being re-established; however, one reliable source gave notice that one beekeeper in Louisiana alone had lost 1,500 hives to Rita. Reports from East Texas have not been received at this time.

The full scope of this double disaster is still unraveling; it is realized that many hobbyist and commercial operations have had severe losses. A report from Mississippi noted that at least three hobby beekeepers have lost their homes and their bees due to the surge. There are reports of trees and hives blown over as far as 200 miles inland. In Alabama, some of the worst cases are reports of hives being hit by Katrina and washed away by the storm surge. Other hives were killed when the winds knocked off lids or turned over hives and then 8 to 10 inches of rain literally drowned the bees. Outyards were difficult to access as many roads were filled with debris and downed trees, other roads have been left impassable or washed away by the floodwaters. This is an area used extensively for overwintering colonies of and as a home base for commercial honey and pollination operations. Most of America's commercial queen operations are located in a broad band ranging from southeast Georgia to eastern Texas; many queen operations in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama have endured severe losses and it is feared that those operations in East Texas have fallen to the same fate. It will be months before the true amount of damage can be fully assessed. The loss of hives and resources due to these two hurricanes will affect the beekeeping industry for quite some time.

New School Year Offers Healthier Choices & Changes for Students

By Rebecca Leigh White

With reports of high obesity and diabetes levels in Alabamians, educators and health advocates chose to address these serious health risks. Making positive changes in students' health, nutrition, and fitness habits will help the state's students become healthier adults. Limiting the intake of non-nutritive foods, promoting more physical fitness, and providing comprehensive instruction on healthy choices helps students feel better, which increases learning abilities.

The Alabama Board of Education voted to form a committee to review the state of health of Alabama's young people on July 13, 2004. Dr. Joe Morton, State Superintendent of Education, asked Commissioner Ron Sparks to serve as Chairman of the Nutrition Subcommittee of the statewide committee tasked to review the state of health of Alabama's youth. The recommendations, made by the Statewide Committee to Review the State of Health of America's Youth with Particular Emphasis on Alabama's Youth and approved by the Alabama Board of Education in July of 2005, call for schools to develop plans to phase out low-nutritive foods in vending machines and school stores and phase in high-nutritive food replacements, eliminate unhealthy foods in cafeterias, and add more physical education activities and requirements. Once those school plans are reviewed, approved, or have additional recommendations added by the State Superintendent of Education, the state Board will then reconsider the situation to enable full implementation to begin in the 2006-07 school year. "

Some Alabama public schools already have comprehensive health and fitness plans in place, while others will undergo quite a few changes to implement the plan. One difference will be the inclusion of more locally grown fruits and vegetables and the elimination of fried foods in school meals. Another change will limit the amount of soft drinks in vending machines for different grade levels. Additionally, new physical education guidelines require all students in Grades K-8 to participate in quality physical education classes daily.

Product Spotlight

This month we are recognizing Moore's Marinades. Moore's Original Marinade was introduced thirty years ago at a steakhouse in Jasper. In 1991 C&M Food Distributing Inc., of Birmingham, purchased Moore's Marinade and made with the highest quality ingredients around that enhance food flavors instead of covering them. All flavors are MSG free, gluten free and Kosher. Moore's Marinade has won television, radio, billboard and cook-off awards

Rabies Vaccine I

Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries Ron Sparks and State Public Health Veterinarian Dr. Mel Stephens announced the 2005 annual rabies vaccine bait drop. Distribution of oral rabies vaccine baits begins October 21 in two different bait drop zones in portions of 11 Alabama counties. Baits will be dropped from a low-flying aircraft in forested and rural regions and distributed by hand in populated areas. The distribution will begin in northeast Alabama in Cherokee, DeKalb, Etowah, Jackson and Marshall counties, followed by a bait drops in Bibb, Chilton, Jefferson, Perry, Shelby and Tuscaloosa counties. This federally funded project is intended to halt the westward movement of rabies by orally vaccinating raccoons.

Vaccine drops have been used successfully in Alabama since November 2003. Since 1989 more than 40 million baits have been distributed in the U.S. and Canada without any major problems.

State Public Health Veterinarian Dr. Mel Stephens and Agriculture and Industries Commissioner Ron Sparks discuss the importance

Control and Prevention cooperators in this project. USDA currently works with states to distribute baits. "vaccination of raccoons can prevent the spread of rabies into west Alabama, which it currently is not known to occur," Commissioner Sparks stated. "Using bait drops can be very effective in our effort to protect our families and livestock."

People and pets cannot be vaccinated against rabies from coming into contact with the baits, and the public is asked to leave the bait catchers alone.

Habitat Buffers for U

By Claude Jenkins, Wildlife Biologist, Alabama Wildlife Federation

Throughout the Southeast, certain bird species associated with early successional habitats have declined to historic lows. From 1980-1999, the fall northern bobwhite population declined from nearly 59 million birds to 20 million birds. According to the U.S. Geological Survey's Breeding Bird Survey, bobwhite breeding populations declined at an average rate of 3.8% per year from 1982-1999. Although these declines have state, and non-governmental conservation organizations recognized the unintended effects of intensive farming practices on soil and water quality, and wildlife habitat. This increase sensitivity to environmental stewardship reflected in the evolution of federal policy in recent years. The recent example is Conservation Practice 33 (CP33), Habitat Buffers for Upland Birds, which became effective in October 2004.
